

INTERSECTIONS

Mind, hands, materials and details intersect.

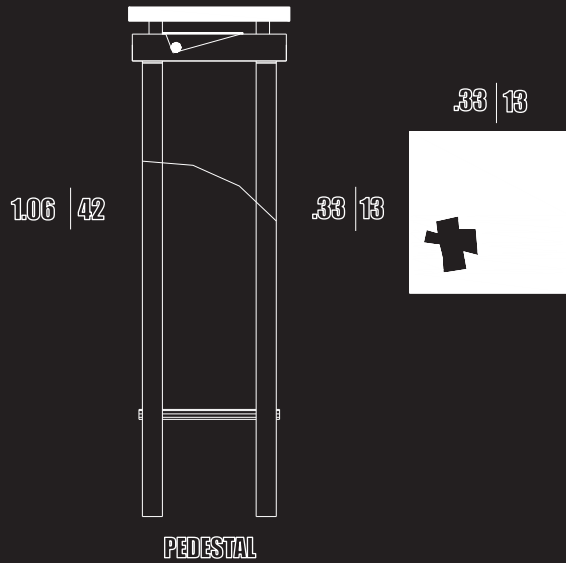

When an architect, a furniture maker, or an industrial designer presents a new model or a new collection, he/she illustrates the novelties, but rarely explains the process of its formation.

The CARTAGENA COLLECTION: INTERSECTIONS, other than good design and dedicated craftsmanship, explain the intricate and exciting process of its formation and making. It is contemporary design with a history.

The historic center of Cartagena de Indias, Colombia has been selected as the site, that with its spatial experience, becomes the idea that induces the conceptual and material development of this collection. In order to establish a dialogue with the natural and the built historic components that make up the historic district, “urban archaeology” principles were applied.

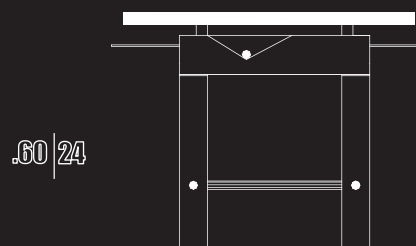

Following the steps of an artificial excavation, the artifacts found in the study area were exhumed, delayed in isolated elements and series, juxtaposed to create new readings of the area, fused by combining their planimetric and perspective characteristics, and materialized into new compositions, using CAD technology, models and photo montages with the purpose of proposing the creation of new compositions: INTERSECTIONS-Inspired on the historic district of the UNESCO named Heritage for Humanity port city.
